

Reflections

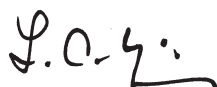

What you see before you this year, is the result of the virtually-all-new process incrementally introduced and refined in the last four years, including an extension of the paper deadline by three weeks. This has involved the introduction of new electronic-assisted tools and procedures for almost everything and everyone involved: for abstract and paper submission by the authors; for paper sorting by the Program Chair and Sub-Committee Chairs; for paper distribution to the International Technical Program Committee (ITPC); for review-data compilation by the ITPC reviewers; for pre-voting; for Advance-Program preparation and editing; for Advance-Program production; for final-paper submission; for paper editing by our editorial team; for paper verification by authors and Session chairs; and for process coordination; and for final compilation of the Digest.

Of greatest significance to submitting and accepted authors, this year was the revised and improved Web-based entry process operated by Mira Digital Publishing, which served to structure the author-interaction process from several points of view: Authors were clearly informed of what was needed; editors were provided with a more-organized presentation; and management have been provided with more timely information, moving it to respond more quickly to the usual problems that any systems modification reveals.

This year, the technical editorial staff included six Editors (M. Amiri, G. Gulak, S. Mirabbasi, K. Pagiamztis, R. Spencer, and K.C. Smith), under the direction of a managing editor (Laura Fujino).

In recognition of the large amount of work leading to the Digest open before you, I wish to acknowledge a great many individuals: Jan Van der Spiegel, Yoshi Hagihara, Tim Tredwell, members of the ITPC, and all of the authors, for their individual contributions; Bill Romer, and Mira Digital Publishing, for Web-based and other preparatory support, including facilitation of pre-voting, paper-review process, including Digest CD; Steve Bonney, and S3Digital Publishing, for author and Session Chair interaction, for figure layout, for paper formatting, for pre-press preparation, and for general assistance; Diane Melton, Molly Bartkowksi and Amy Roth of Courtesy Associates for general interfacing, problem-solving, and coordination; Mandana Amiri (University of British Columbia), Glenn Gulak (University of Toronto), Shahriar Mirabbasi (University of British Columbia), Kostas Pagiamztis (Altera), Richard Spencer (University of California, Davis), our editors, and K.C. Smith (University of Toronto), our editor-in-reserve, for heroic effort on an ever-tighter schedule with seemingly more papers submitted but fewer accepted.

My thanks to you all!
